Daniel J. McInerney is professor of history and associate department head in the History Department at Utah State University. His research centers on nineteenth-century U.S. history, focusing on social reform. He is the author of two books: The Fortunate Heirs of Freedom: Abolition and Republican Thought (1994) and *The Travellers' History of the United State*s (2000). Translations of the latter work appeared in 2009 in both Russian (Midgard Press) and Chinese (Shanghai Jiao Tong University Press).

Since 2009, Dan has worked with the Lumina Foundation for Education on its Tuning initiative, serving on the project in the state of Utah, with the American Historical Association, as a member of the Tuning USA Advisory Board, and with the E.U.-U.S. Tuning Board. He has spoken to audiences involved in Tuning projects in the states of Kentucky, Texas, Idaho, Montana, and the regional Midwest Higher Education Compact as well as the 2012 World Tuning Conference in Brussels. In 2014, he addressed university audiences across Japan on the implementation of Tuning. In the same year, the National Institute for Learning Outcomes Assessment named him one of 11 "coaches" on the national Degree Qualifications Profile/Tuning project.

The Association of American Colleges & Universities has appointed Dan to serve as principal investigator on their five-state "Faculty Collaboratives" initiative, a professional development project for post-secondary instructors designed to integrate a wide range of academic reform projects. Dan's articles on Tuning have appeared in The History Teacher, Arts and Humanities in Higher Education, World History Connected, and American Historical Association Perspectives on History.
