Justification

WorldShare Management Services annual subscription which will provide library services including cataloging, metadata, interlibrary loans, print and electronic acquistions with serial control, circulation and delivery and discovery tool.

See attached justification for the selection of World Share Management Services.

Charge To: College Operating Funds Account Number: 10-04-490000-607763 The Sidney Silverman Library recommends migration to OCLC WMS beginning with data migration from January 2017 with complete data migration and testing by the end of June 2017 with staff and complete transitioning from our current Millennium ILS to WMS by July 1, 2017.

The major advantages of OCLS WMS are important and numerous: WMS is cost-effective and cost saving, academic libraries already using OCLC services (BCC is firmly in this camp), such as Cataloging and Interlibrary Loan: OCLC's excellent technical support for libraries; OCLC's resource collaboration among other libraries on a global scale with over 16,000 libraries in 100 countries. This huge resource sharing amounts to over 40 million search requests for information being processed each day for OCLC data. Other essential and cost saving advantages are noted below:

WMS offers a discovery tool highlighting both our print and online resources in one online catalog thereby ensuring that print materials and electronic resources (i.e ebooks and databases) are found via our catalog, thus no longer requiring the purchasing of ProQuest's product for discovery, 360 Link at a cost savings of $13, 821.88 (2016-2017 budget).

OCLC pricing for the WMS annual subscription fee includes the current annual costs for Cataloging and Resource Sharing that BCC pays of approximately $35,000. This cost saving enables unlimited records to be acquired and is over half of the price that we would currently be paying. For example in year 2, the cost for WMS is $75,064 however when the annual $35,000 is figured into the equation, the cost for the ILS that year is $40,000. This cost savings is annually saved when considering that our current Integrated Library System (ILS) through Innovative is $40,000 and does not include records to be purchased by OCLC that are necessary.

Training for WMS will consist of on-site, Web-based and take advantage of the cohort model thereby ensuring well-rounded training for the entire library staff. The Web-based (cloud based) system architecture of the WMS modules for our ILS allows the electronic interchange of information between IT, the library and OCLC and negates the need to have a physical ILS server. The ability to migration from our current III proxy server will enable the installation of an EZ Proxy Server that will be hosted virtually by IT and require much less hands on support.

The ability to access information from multiple, unlimited, simultaneous log-ins is something that is not available with Millennium. The proposed migration from Millennium to Sierra from ILL would still require a $35,000 annual cost for library records to be obtained. When this is taken into account, WMS is the obvious choice.

The Library will need an approval of the contract for the one-time migration fee to OCLC (split over three years). The OCLC WMS migration will require $12,292.50 for FY 2016-2017. For years 2017-2018 and 2018-2019, please see the attached contract.

OCLC, Inc. is the sole provider of shared cataloging services and a cooperative purchasing program for Library supplies and cataloging services. By being the sole provider of cataloging records, the proposed Integrated Library System that uses these records provides the best functionality for integration and cost savings. Since OCLC records are seamlessly integrated with the program to access these library records, two vendors are no longer needed (as they are currently required). Unlike our current system, there is no need for a local server. Finally, the full integration of OCLC with our library includes a discovery service, an A to Z service (no longer requiring a Serials Solution vendor) and a link resolver service that will no longer require the library to pay for three other vendors. Furthermore, OCLC, Inc. is a non-profit library utility and is exempt from Pay to Play. Library materials and services are exempt from public bidding.

Justification

The proposed project intends to support at-risk students by infusing the humanities and humanistic perspectives into professional training and developmental education courses. Texts, artwork, and ideas of the various humanities will be used to help students strengthen their academic skills and successfully complete their coursework while simultaneously encouraging a more diverse and tolerant perspective of our increasingly diverse community, a world view that will help them to become successful, effective, and humane professionals and citizens.

The project abstract follows.

The Budget will be forthcoming. There will be no additional costs to the College.

Project Summary

Project Directors, Departments: Eileen Fitzgerald, English Basic Skills; Leigh Jonaitis, English Basic Skills; Maria Kasparova, English as a Second Language; Richard Kuiters, Criminal Justice; Peter Dlugos, Philosophy/Religion

Our project seeks to build educational equity by addressing issues of diversity through the lens of the humanities. Many of our first-generation and otherwise at-risk students enter college underprepared to succeed in an academic environment and without the literacy, critical thinking, writing, and study skills so vital to their academic, professional, and personal success. Our proposal seeks to support these students by infusing the humanities and humanistic perspectives into professional training and developmental education courses. We hope to use the texts, artwork, and ideas of the various humanities to help students strengthen their academic skills and successfully complete their coursework while simultaneously encouraging a more diverse and tolerant perspective of our increasingly diverse community, a world view that will help them to become successful, effective, and humane professionals and citizens.

Our project will focus on providing opportunities for faculty from all disciplines to study the ways in which the humanities can address issues of equity and diversity in the classroom. Faculty will explore the world outside of their respective disciplines by engaging with the humanities from academic, pedagogical, and social justice perspectives. This collaborative, interdisciplinary project will strengthen our commitment to a richer array of learning communities, a high-impact practice that emphasizes equity and support for student completion. Initial academic seminars will encourage connections among our various fields and build competence and confidence in areas outside of our specialties. Subsequent pedagogical workshops will focus on developing specific curricula and pedagogical approaches that strengthen the teaching of humanities within all classrooms, professional, developmental and college-level.

All faculty and staff will be encouraged to participate in seminars, workshops, and conferences in order to maximize exposure to the humanities. Therefore, this project will build collaboration across all constituencies of the college: full-time faculty, contingent faculty, administrators, student services personnel, counselors, students and staff. The project will also forge stronger connections with our communities as students explore real world challenges by engaging in the dialogue on issues of equity and diversity within their local communities, thereby raising the level of public discourse and inspiring students to initiate constructive changes in their professional and private circles.

Justification

This funding request is the first phase of a two-phase project. The purpose of this project is to make a documentary film about the Iranian Student Confederation, an organization of expatriate Iranian students dispersed throughout the world, especially concentrated in the US, Europe, Canada, and Australia. Between 1960 and 1978, it made singular contributions to democratic practices and ideas among opposition movements. The Islamic Republic of Iran has eliminated any historical record of student organizations, especially secular, left, and nationalist movements. Although many articles and two books have been written about the Confederation, no filmic record of it exists. Those founders who are still alive are aging; this project will capture their accounts of the Confederation's early days in video format. This funding request will fund the pre-production efforts of this project.

The project abstract follows.

The Budget will be forthcoming. Matching funds are not required; budget in development.

Background

In countries living under a dictatorship, where there are no independent political parties, trade unions, or civic organizations, student movements are often the force behind political activity. During the period in which it was active, the Confederation was the only organized opposition to the Shah outside of Iran. Inside Iran, the opposition was largely forced underground.

Limited opportunities for higher education in Iran, as well as a policy on the part of the Pahlavi regime of pursuing modernization through educating students in Western universities, led many students to go abroad. Despite the expansion of universities and colleges inside Iran in the late 1950s, and the number of Iranian students studying abroad exploded from 4000 in 1957 to 31,000 in 1965. By 1978 there were 100,000 students studying outside Iran. Among this expat student population there were many supporters of the Confederation. The organization was focused on events inside Iran: freeing political prisoners and human rights, as well as opposition to the death penalty. When it organized a demonstration, tens of thousands might show up.

From the beginning, the politics of the Confederation reflected the politics of opposition inside Iran. Later, the constituency of the Confederation became radicalized through a variety of factors aside from the ideologies of underground political groups in Iran; for example, guerrilla organizations, besides anti-colonial and anti-imperialist movements in Europe, the anti-Vietnam War movement in the US, and the exposure of students to political ideologies from China, Cuba, and Latin America.

Organizational History

According to its initial charter, membership was a matter of individual affiliation, not a congress of the representatives political groups and parties, although it was known that members were often associated with political organizations; in order to maintain the independence of Confederation members, there was an injunction against parties' recruiting in the organization. The other precepts were transparent and open communication and a platform of support for freeing political prisoners in Iran and human rights generally, including an end to the death penalty. As the Confederation became radicalized, it became harder to agree on a platform, and the organization split in different directions.

From the beginning of the Confederation, its participants embraced parliamentary procedure, and Robert's Rules of Order became the standard for conducting meetings. Membership was based on an individual affiliation rather than membership through any political groups or parties, although these were also present. The Confederation was financially independent and costs were paid through member dues.

Political History

In 1965, an assassination attempt on the Shah by one of his guards became an excuse for the government to crack down on leftist students. They arrested six members of the Confederation who returned to Iran, and sentenced them to death. The Student Confederation sought the help of the United Nations to abolish the death penalty in international law, with the support of public intellectuals concerned with human rights such as Jean-Paul Sartre and Bertrand Russell, as well as various human rights organizations. This was unprecedented for a student organization and brought the Confederation to the fore on the international stage where its success lent it prestige and legitimacy.

Besides the influence of the Shah's repression of the regime's political opponents, the political influences on Confederation participants derived from the politics of the eras in which it was active: the Vietnam War and the demonstrations in opposition to it, social movements, both in Europe and in the United States, such as the Women's movement and the Civil Rights movement.

Various factors contributed to the end of the Confederation. The forces that led up to the Iranian Revolution made the Confederation redundant, but even before that there were splits in the organization.

Approach to Making the Film

The aim of this documentary is to bring the experience of the Iranian Student Confederation to younger generations who did not witness it, to appreciate its contributions and, possibly, its limitations. This story will be told through narratives, archival footage, and interviews with approximately 30 former members, selected to represent a holistic view of the organization, with different geographic and national groups represented as well as women. The use of archival footage from conferences and demonstrations, photos, and interviews with supporters of the Confederation will be other resources contributing to the film.

Questions to be asked during interviews with the Confederation leaders identified as the spokespeople for this history will be prepared around various topics and will depend on my research into their participation. The discussion points taken up during the interviews will be based on the circumstances of their participation. If more than one interviewee can be present, a dialogue between participants might be constructed to allow the audience a window into the process of arriving at a record of this historical period. As a filmmaker, I approach each prospective interviewee with a series of questions, but allow for an open dialogue and conversation.

To capture interviews with thirty influential members of the organization who live in eight to ten cities worldwide will take some time, so it is urgently important to begin this process within the next year.
